

Someday My Prints Will Come

An open letter to the Disney Princesses, from your biggest fan

Dear all,

I don't know if you remember me, but I'm the girl who sang along with you from the other side of the screen as I binge-watched your films my entire childhood. With the blonde bob, remember? No? Well I'm still your biggest fan, and I've been meaning to write for ages. There has been so much talk lately with the royal wedding, but there was something I must write to you that was bothering me slightly. You all looked absolutely lavish at the ceremony- it is amazing how well those gowns have held up all these years! But for some reason I just could not get my head around one thing. None of you have had a style update in YEARS! With the upcoming summer months, don't you all think there are a few changes that could be made? Don't get me wrong you all look great, but let me make a suggestion... It is time to ditch the Prince and go for prints.

Let me begin by pointing out a few minor details that got me thinking about this print crisis. For years you have all provided your admirers with sleek elegance through ball gowns, perfectly pinned hair, and sparkling crystal tiaras.

Cinderella, you're always a favorite, and that beautiful glass slipper we are so thrilled you were finally reunited with. The soft pastel blues we know you for have always brought us a gentle and delicate look into the life of a true princess. With this year's summer trends, I think this calls for a desperate change. Why not switch things up and go for a little sundress? Although you were right about the pastel blue, why not try a soft blue gingham instead, considering that is the most in print of the moment! I bet some cute little birds would be happy to help.

For you Ariel, we need to rethink that swimsuit. The beach is a fabulous place to test out the waters (literally) and play around with print possibilities! The trendiest beachwear right now consists of nautical themed blue and white stripes, and a contrasting playful version of bright rainbow. Or why not go all out and take a chance on some polka dots! A little bandeau top with bright spots would make you the sunniest on the beach.

And Belle, Belle, Bell, You can rock a pinafore like nobody else, and your butter yellow gown is a flattering color for you for sure, but hear me out. The muted yellow you tend to opt for is beginning to show signs of age, and might need a little tweaking. Although yellow is nice, how about this summer you try out a different shade of your sunny staple? One of the trendiest colours new colors is mustard yellow. It's no surprise this 70s' favourite is enjoying a revival, appearing everywhere from home interior, high street retail, and even on the fashion week runways. Why not switch things up and go for a mustard yellow floral print, in a Richard Quinn-esq style? Now that would definitely turn heads in the ballroom.

For the rest of you lovely ladies, I have so many prints, from geometric patterns to tie dye to stars, so sit tight. Prints! Pattern! But for you, Snow White, I'll leave you with this one suggestion: stay away from the apples this season and go for cherries instead.

Kind regards,
A Print-scess enthusiast
